

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to air the unheard documentary of presidential-hopeful John Kerry's war activities is a clear example of "the media" finally getting it right. Why this story and the events surrounding it have not been revealed before is open to speculation. One thing I do know is that it takes a lot of character on the part of Sinclair Broadcasting to air such a program in the face of such bitter opposition. Better to finally broadcast the program late than not to broadcast it at all!

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. Why no other major broadcaster has chosen to tell this story is indicative of the bias that exists. Do you really think that the Dan Rather story would have faded as quickly as it has if the individual involved would have been Rush Limbaugh?

Sinclair's actions should be commended and if anything CBS' FCC license reviewed. Thank you for considering my comments in this matter.
